

Minimising burden and bureaucracy

We work with health and care organisations to understand their information needs and the benefits of collecting data, whilst also conducting reviews and making recommendations about how administrative burden may be minimised locally and nationally.

£75 million

our estimate of the total administrative cost of central health and care data collections

245

number of national collections reviewed in the last six months

80

number of recommendations made to minimise burden

Over 100

visits to health and care organisations in the last year to build a picture of data collection activity

“It is critical we ensure time dealing with data is not wasted time by extracting every ounce of value from it and turning it into helpful information we can use to improve care.”

Dr Karen Castille,
Associate Director,
NHS Confederation
